The History

The building at 1410 Broad Street was designed by the acclaimed Victorian architect William Ridgeway Wilson in 1910. The main floor was home to the Plimley Auto Company, one of Victoria's first automobile businesses, who used the space as a showroom. The shop was owned by Thomas Plimley, who sold the first car in the city in 1901. Over the years the company grew managing many dealerships and garages around the city up until its closure in 1998.
